

TRANSLATION OF ARABIC LITERATURE AWARD 2010

The King Fahd Center for Middle East & Islamic Studies at the J. William Fulbright College of Arts and Sciences, University of Arkansas, will award a prize in advanced royalties for the best book-length translation of Arabic literature submitted for publication by Syracuse University Press. For this award, the original author (if still holding rights to the work) will receive, in lieu of royalties, $5,000 and the translator will receive $5,000. Independent judges select the award winning translation which may be from any of the following genres: poetry, novel, short story collection, drama, or literary non-fiction such as autobiography or memoir. Submitted translations must be previously unpublished in book form; all translation rights must be cleared for publication.

Previous winners may not submit subsequent manuscripts for a period of 5 years. Submissions from current faculty, students, or anyone affiliated with the University of Arkansas will not be considered. Former University of Arkansas students or faculty remain ineligible for 5 years after graduation or ending their affiliation with the University.

Send manuscript as hard copy and on CD, along with a print version of the original Arabic, to: Professor Adnan Haydar, Dept. of World Languages, Literatures, and Cultures, 425 Kimpel Hall, University of Arkansas, Fayetteville, AR 72701 (ahaydar@uark.edu). We ask that you send an extra title page with the name of the translator deleted for the benefit of the judges, who will not be informed of the translators' names. The winner will be announced in September, 2010.

DEADLINE: APRIL 30, 2010
